

Sexual abuse is common in our society. Empowering athletes, coaches, officials, and board members through education is one tool to help eradicate sexual misconduct from sporting communities. Learn more from some of these leading organizations.

- RAINN, America's largest anti-sexual violence organization, has the most current and comprehensive information about recovering from sexual abuse, the grooming process, statistics, personal stories from survivors, and tips for having supportive and non-judgmental conversations with survivors of sexual assault. Their Safety and Prevention page has information and resources about what consent is, safety tips for students, how to respond if someone pressures you for sexual activity, and more.
- National Sexual Violence Resource Center (NSVRC) has excellent resources for both Survivors and their Friends & Family. They include information to help understand sexual assault, as well as what you can do to help others as part of your own healing.
- Male Survivor is a website for male survivors of sexual abuse, offering support, community, and learning opportunities.
- 1 in 6 is an organization that provides support for male survivors of sexual abuse, offering weekly on-line support groups, stories by survivors, myths vs. facts, book and film recommendations, and resources for family and friends.

Every U.S. state and territory has a sexual assault coalition that can help you find your local sexual violence resource center. Sexual violence resource centers typically provide individual counseling, support groups, advocacy, legal assistance, hospital or court accompaniment, and other types support to victim-survivors of sexual abuse. These services are usually free of charge.
